If the place is that of their birth, or one familiar through a long residence, it holds a still deeper interest in the regard of all who love home and country. The early settlement of Vineland was in a manner unusual. In 1861, a large tract of land containing thousands of acres, was acquired by one man who desired to carry out certain ideals he had long cherished - founding a model town, made attractive and beautiful, with good roads, shaded walks, and well kept and productive farms, with fruit, vines and flowers; a place where the esthetic principle would appeal to resident and stranger alike, whose social advantages would attract and hold young and old, where the united labors of the people would benefit the whole community. To this land, a wilderness in fact, easily accessible from the large eastern cities, came settlers, drawn thither by the advantages of climate,...
