Not illustrated. 1885 Excerpt: .is intensified by the addition of ammonia water, whereas the principle precipitated by basic acetate of lead from hydrastis possesses no fluorescence, either in its purely aqueous solution or when to the latter ammoniawater or an acid is added. In the discussion which followed the reading of my paper on hydrastine at the last meeting of the American Pharmaceutical Association it was stated by a member that berberine in the presence of iron shows a dark-green color. This statement was refuted at the time by the writer, although it was not then convenient to practically demonstrate the correctness of his assertion. Having since made repeated experiments with this alkaloid, it may again be stated that neither berberine nor its salts assume any coloration in contact with ferric salts. When a green coloration is produced by salts of iron in solutions of either berberine or hydrastine, as may be the case in commercial specimens of these alkaloids, it is due to a slight contamination with the organic acid or coloring principle previously described, and which can only be completely separated from the alkaloids by repeated crystallizations. The conclusions relating to the disputed points of the subject of hydrastis and its constituents, upon which it is hoped Proc. Amer. Phaim. Assoc. 1884, p. 512. the present investigation may have thrown some light, may be finally summarized as follows: I. The only alkaloidal constituents of the rhizome of Hydrastis canadensis are berberine and hydrastine. II. The fluorescence observed...
