Let the string be now shortened until the note E is produced; the length of string which produces this note will be found to be $\frac{1}{2}$ ths of that which produces C. Shortening the string further, we find that the length which produces the note F is $\frac{2}{3}$ ths of that which produces C. In the same way we learn that G is produced by $\frac{3}{4}$ ths, A by $\frac{4}{5}$ ths, and B by $\frac{5}{6}$ ths of the length which produces the note C. Finally, we should find that the second C in the series is produced by a string whose length is one half of that corresponding to the fundamental note: the second C is the octave of the first. 12. Calling then the length of string which produces the fundamental note C, unity, the lengths which correspond to the seven notes of the gamut are expressed...
